THE SPANISH REPUBLIC. The news from Madrid which we print this morning will be received with a feeling of sadness by the friends of Republicanism everywhere. But, depressing as it is, it is not so fatally indicative of the destruction of the Republic as it might be. The information received is so meagre, however, as to render it impossible at this writing to forecast even the immediate future. The coup d'etat by which the Cortes has been dispersed is not so much the result of a legitimate defeat of Castelar's administration as it is of a conspiracy no doubt headed by Salmeron and a few Republican leaders, who are either jealous of Castelar's growing power and popularity or honestly opposed his policy of governmental conduct. With this fact before us we are forced to scoopt the deduction that the trouble after all is within the Republican ranks. The Cortes is overwhelmingly Republican. In so far as it legitimately represents the opinions of the Spanish people it is almost unanimous in opposition to the Monarchy. The strife, then, is for the leadership of the Republic, and while it may encourage the Carlists and Intransigentes in their efforts to change the form of govern ment, it does not necessarily imperil the a verdict of acquittal. Republic. It seems that the principal difference between Castelar and Salmeron has been occasioned by discussions of the question of capital punishment. Salmeron has favored the abolition of executions as a punishment for crime of any kind. When Castelar as the head of the Cabinet, was recognized as the virtual President of the Republic, he attempted to conciliate the contending factions in the Republican ranks and to attach the army to the cause of Republicanism. In his attempt to do the lat-

The character of these provisions is yet shrouded in the mysenvelopes the future, but it is believed that they contemplate such an independence of the island and such such an arrangement, based upon principles of equity and justice and upon its policy that the integrity of Spanish territory shall be preserved. If the pending disturbance continues, it is evident that the negotiations may be indefinitely postponed; but there is no reason to despair even now. It is instructive to look back upon the learned therefrom shows conclusively the inevitable progress of popular government. The existing troubles are but a part and parcel of the struggle which attends that progress. Torn by internal dissensions the Government has passed rapidly from one phase to another of repeated revolution which was inaugurated previous to, and compelled the flight of, Queen Isabella. After a period of several months' fluctuation between a Monarchy and a Republic under a provisional government, controlled by Prim and Serrano, King Amadeus I., second son of the King of Italy, ascended the Spanish throne on the 4th of December, 1870. He was chosen at a full meeting of the Cortes by 191 votes out of 311 present. Affairs progressed anything but smoothly with the new sovereign. Disturbance were constantly fomented by the Carlists and the Internationalists, resulting in the assassination of General Prim and an attheir carriage. In April, 1872, Carlist insurrections were precipitated in several of the provinces, and at the close nonth over 15,000 men were in the field under De Rada, and rallying to the cry of "Viva Carlos VII!" "Away with the foreigner!" "Long live Spain!" This civil commotion has continued ever since. with varied success. Meanwhile the Republicans, under the leadership of Salmeron, Pi Margall, Castelar and Figueras, repudiated all sympathy with Don Carlos, and also declined to fight him under the stand-stances at home, and striving also to put down insurrections in Cube and the Phillipine islands, the Government of Amadeus tinued to struggle on under the premiership successively of Sagosta, Admiral Topete, Marshal Serrano and Zorilla, the latter being a radical, opposed to the conservative policy of Serrano. At the August election the Cortes returned was largely radical in politics, and, besides, obtain the sympathy and support, to a considerable extent, of the pronounced Republicans. On the 11th of February, 1873, King Amadeus abdicated the throne, and by a vote of the Cortes Spain became a Republic, under the guidance of Figueras, Castelar, Pi Margall and their associates. The events of the past year are still fresh in the minds of all. Figueras, Pi Margall and Castelar have each in turn essayed the control of affairs, and now "Chaos has come CONGRESS. Congress reassembles at noon to-day, and will, it is hoped, settle down imm the hard and important work of the se serious embarrassment and difficulty. The situation is extremely critical, and it will require a high-degree of wisdom upon the part of those who have the responsibility of leadership to meet the requirements of the hour and win back that popular confidence and respect which, there is no use in denying, has been very much impaired since the Presidential election. For the last twelve months the Republican majority in the House has been blundering as no party ever House has been blundering as no party ever blundered, and the only wonder is that the condition of affairs is not far worse than it actually is at present. We have had folly after folly; swagger, instead of statesm ship; private have been preferred to public interests; the most obvious necessities and needs of the people have been ignored in the haste and desire to carry out the schemes of the lobby or to do the bidding of those who never enter the Capitol except

No newspaper or set of newspapers can tear down what is right or build up what is wrong; but at the same time they wield an enormous influence, and the only way to check it is to so not as to merit their commendation. The Republi-can majority in Congress has a magnificent opportunity to serve the people and perpetuate its power. It has practically no opposition, for the old Democratic organication is hopelessly broken, and Liberal Republicanism is a mere shadow. The great danger to the party is from within, and not from without. The strongest opposition to it is to be found in its own ranks; in the indifference and the discontent of its own members. But if Congress this winter will do its work fairly and squarely and honestly the clouds that are gathering on the political horizon will speedily pass away, and we can look to the future with the fullest confidence and courage. The party is on trial, and it behooves those who have its destinies in their hands to so act that the great jury of the people must give

Governor Kemper complains of a lack of banking capital because the volume is less than before the war, and falls to give the correct solution of this searcity. In those days a very large proportion of the banking capital of the State was employed in a traffic which, happily, now no longer exists—the vending of slaves. The same amount may now be needed for other purposes, such as the employment of that labor which is no longer the object of purchase and sale, but the comparison is fallacious in the absence of a note of this important change in the condition of the industry of the State. Formerly she exported labor and purreducts. It is to be feared that Governor Kemper has adopted or constructed an imprac ticable theory upon the labor question, and that his appeals to foreigners and Northerners to aid him in the attempt to experiment upon it will fall of an affirmative response. Let him show real statesmanship and a sound political economy by utilizing the means he has at hand
